BANK ORGANIZED IN GREENE COUNTY

Institution Located at Stanardsville Starts Off With Fine Prospects.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Stanardsville, Va., August 25.—With every promise of a successful future, the first bank ever established in Greene county began its career on Wednesday.

The need of a bank in this section has long been felt, and when the proposition was broached a short time ago it found ready supporters throughout the county. A State institution was organized in a remarkably short time, under the name of the Bank of Greene, and with a capital of $10,000. Half of this amount was paid in Wednesday, and judging from the interest displayed on the opening day patronage will be prompt and liberal. It seems to be a source of satisfaction to everybody that it will no longer be necessary for Greene county people to go to the inconvenience of dealing at a distance through banks in other places. Practically all of the stock is held by local people. The officers are as follows: President, Dr. E. W. Simms; First Vice-President, John S. Chapman; Second Vice-President, W. B. Cole, Jr.; Secretary of Board of Directors, Dr. E. D. Davis.

The bank is directly in charge of the cashier, W. Frank Hisey, recently of Edinburg, Va., who is proving himself a popular and capable official.

VIRGINIA'S YOUNG BLANEY

GEORGE E. ROEBUCK.

YOUTHFUL PLAYWRIGHT TELLS OF UPS AND DOWNS

George Roebuck, the Young Blaney, Who Is Staging His Production at Age of Seventeen, Not Discouraged by Uphill Effort.

BY GEORGE E. ROEBUCK.

When a boy of seventeen tries to write a play, that is a real play, with a real plot, and all the rest of the "reals" that go with a play, it is no joke. And if they all have the times I do about getting the money, well, I feel sorry for them.

They call me the new Charles E. Blaney of the Old Dominion. Well, I ought to be proud of that title, and hope some day to do justice to it. If the writing part of it was all that I had to do, it would be all to the good, for that part of it comes to me like eating, but the one big thing about it is—well, the money part stands before me like the side of the American National Bank, for I could scale the walls of that building just about as easily as I could get a man to open his heart and pocketbook, to back me up in my first theatre venture.

But I am not giving up, no, not by a long sight. I believe it is all Bill Cervantes that once said: "A faint heart never wins a fair lady." Well, I am not after the "fair lady," but a man who is willing to help me out. I am going to put the play on the night of September 29, at the Academy of Music, and hope to have a good house, and for once in my life have a "real sweet dream—the dream all poets and authors long for."

They call me the Charles E. Blaney of Virginia, and that gentleman can write a drama with his left foot at the same time. That is going some. I cannot say that I can do that stunt now, but maybe I can when I am a little older. "My bones are too soft" for such work at the present writing. But, wait. Did Clyde Fitch write any plays that you can remember at the age of seventeen? Did George Ade do anything at that age that you can scratch your head and remember?

Now, you will say I am "blowing my own horn," but wait. I have got to do something to get the public to know that I am writing, so I will do a little blowing of my own horn at present, and in the future let the more cultivated and stately gentlemen call themselves reporters do it for me. But that time has not got here yet, but soon, let me pray. After I get this play on, I know I will not have such a hard time in my next venture, for I know all the girls will like it, for "Beatrice" is the kind that wins the hearts of every girl in the country.

They need not fear that it is anything like "The Blue Mouse," for nay, I would never do such a stunt; my gentle pen would refrain from such a duty. Nor is the hero like the loving St. Elmo, far from it—he is in a class by himself. He is a ladies' man from the sole of his shoes to the crown of his head, and is sure to be the "doc" you hear about.

But I am still blowing my horn; I don't know what kind it is, but I have got the idea it is timed one. I got in a penny prize package the other day at a 5 and 10-cent store.

I want to thank all those who have helped me so far, and those who have not helped me, for they might get the credit for their heads. For the love of Mike, do.

Just a word about Beatrice. Born in the Cumberland Mountains, I guess, with all the class the modern girl has, with a little touch of the 1924 girl will have, when the people will leave the street cars and sail through the air in a Wright "sky-scooter," only touching the high spots. She has a complexion you can see for a block, but it is not a real one—10 cents a block. But she does have all the rats and crimps, and you know what the girls have nowadays; she is a real heroine.

And the rest of the cast are there with the goods, for they all have their ups and downs in good fashion, some not so bad as others, but still they are there, all right.

But if you want to see a show with all the best movers of to-day and yesterday and the day before, just set your sail for Eighth Street on the night of September 29, and see "Beatrice of the Cumberland."

KILLS HER SWEETHEART.

Murder Follows Acquittal of Another Girl on "Unwritten Law."
New Orleans, La., August 25.—Katie Frentsch, nineteen years old, and employed in a local department store, shot and killed Frank Michler, aged twenty-seven, a bootmaker, at Port and North Peter Streets here last night. When the police reached the scene the girl was holding the man's head in her lap and sobbing. She claimed that Michler had wronged her. The killing followed within twenty-four hours of the acquittal of Mamie McLaughlin, a young girl, in the courts here on the charge of murdering Huey Smith, a saloonkeeper. The claims of the McLaughlin girl was that she had been wronged by Smith. The plea of the "unwritten law" was the main defense in her case.

CHARGES FALL FLAT.

School Trustee Vindicated of Accusation of Misappropriation of Funds.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Lynchburg, Va., August 25.—At Brookneel Tuesday afternoon the Campbell county electoral commission heard charges of malfeasance and misappropriation of school funds against Wirt Williams, one of the trustees of the Fallow River District, but there was nothing to substantiate the charges, and they were dismissed. This was followed by the re-election of Williams for another term of three years. These charges were preferred here two weeks ago by patrons of the Fallow River District schools, and the board adjourned to meet Tuesday to hear the patrons, who desired to appear against the trustee. The trial resulted in his absolute vindication.

NEW RATES EFFECTIVE.

By Express Company's Ruling Pocahontas Is No Longer a Virginia Point.
Pocahontas, Va., August 25.—When the United States Geological Survey Corps was in this vicinity last fall it was rumored that it had discovered that Pocahontas was on the West Virginia side of the State line, but it remained for the express company to put Pocahontas out of the State, which they did yesterday.

The new rates of express went into effect here yesterday. As far as the laws of Virginia are concerned, Pocahontas is no longer a Virginia point, because express must come through a part of West Virginia. The State laws requiring express companies to carry five pounds or under to any point in Virginia for 25 cents and fifty pounds for 50 cents, will not be effective to this point.

A meeting of the Board of Trade will be held this week, and a committee will wait on the State Corporation Commissioners and see if the express companies will not be required to live up to the State laws.

Heigars, of Virginia. The attendance here to-day was about 500.
